It is intended to make the SHELBY SENTINEL a first-class Family Newspaper, independent of sect or party, devoted to General News, Literature, and Morality. Appreciating the necessity for a Superior Newspaper in this part of Kentucky, we will bend every energy to make the SENTINEL acceptable to all classes. To those who have a distaste for partisan strife, our paper will be a welcome guest. In the angry mutterings of discord will be hushed in the endeavor to heal the frightful wounds, which years of war have caused. To sustain our paper, we naturally expect the assistance and co-operation of the people of Shelby. While the local interests of this section will not be neglected, we will aim to advance the general prosperity of the State.

The general interests and welfare of the county can in no better way be advanced than through the medium of a newspaper. Devoting our attention to all topics of the day, we will freely and independently discuss them. To prevent any misapprehension as to the position which the SENTINEL will occupy, we will state that our approval and support will be given to a mild and conciliatory policy, condemning all radical, revolutionary or unjust measures. Believing that this is the only course which will result in permanent prosperity to the country and that these views are such as the people of Kentucky naturally and heartily endorse, we shall uphold and defend them at all times. Firm in the opinion that we can make our paper acceptable, we ask a liberal patronage.

Original Poetry.

[For the Shelby Sentinel.]
A TRIBUTE TO MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

As one by one, the shining stars
Of night fade into day,
So one by one the brilliant gems
Of genius pass away.

Long did the light of thy pure mind
O'er earth a radiance shed,
And 'mid its darkness still,
Thy hand alone is dead.

Thou hast but passed from this, into
A higher sphere of thought—
O that some spirit had been near,
Thy "mailed" to have caught.

And stayed on earth thy song so sweet,
So full of faith and love;
While time own hand, now times thy harp
To sweeter strains above.

But still earth hath not lost thee,
Nor can it ever lose,
While round our hearts, like silver streams,
Thy holy music flows.

There never yet has perished here,
A spirit like to thine;
But—passed into eternity—
'Tis shining still on Time.

While some leave but the casket here,
Much of thy soul we find,
Amid the gems, so generously dropped,
From out thy gifted mind.

For three score years, its impress fair
Was traced in burning lines;
And still, from out Heaven's burning sphere,
Its bright reflection shines.

Gilding a tomb where earth's proud ones,
Can never hope to rest;
For warmly shined thy name must be
In every page of breast.

And, in that blessed realm, methinks
The angels would long,
To see thy trembling footsteps turn
Toward their own blissful throng.

With rapturous voices hailed thee there,
And, in thy ransomed land,
A harp of heavenly tuning placed;
And, joyous, bade thee stand.

With happy, kindred spirits, near
To God's eternal throne,
And in a voice divine, renew
Thy pure, seraphic song.

MIMOSA.

ORATION OF R. A. HOLLAND

ON THE OCCASION OF THE REINTERMENT

OF THE REMAINS OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS

WHO, DURING THE WAR, WERE

BURIED IN VARIOUS PARTS OF SCOTT CO.,

KY., DELIVERED AT THE CEMETERY,

NEAR GEORGETOWN.

KENTUCKIANS:—The spot upon which we stand, and the occasion that has called us together, are alike calculated to make this an hour of peculiar sadness. We are among the graves of "our departed," to render the last tribute of esteem to the memory of brave men, who perished, 2,

from home, in defense of a "lost cause."

It is a debt due from the living to the dead. It is a debt the heart loves to pay, and which, when paid, though paid in the most precious coin of tears, still leaves that heart richer than before.

I see around me those who marched and fought side by side with the deceased, and those who, with hostile arms, engaged them in fiercest encounter. The cannon has now hushed its murderous roar; the smoke of battle has vanished; and, arched

by a clear sky and under an olive-wreathed banner, whose white folds are given to gentler breezes than the rude gales of war,

I see victor and vanquished join hands as brothers, and together bow over the fallen heroes who, with their own life-blood,

have written their own most eloquent eulogy.

Truly it is a beautiful sight, if sad—a sight that mingles comfort with grief into a strengthening wine of encouragement,

a sight that, while it reminds us of Him who was pre-eminently the peacemaker of the universe, reminds us of Him most as He walked with the Hebrew children, for his presence among our emotions to-day, in this furnace of sorrow, causes them to be loosed from their bonds, and to walk in the fire and have no hurt.

cause, we will certainly unite in according to them that sincerity of motive we always ask to be accorded to ourselves. It was in obedience to the voice of their States, the voice of their section, and the voice of their own high spirits—three voices that blended into one grand martial strain of appeal, that they left the pleasant pursuits of peace, and eagerly rushed to the fray.
Had they been gifted to pierce the future,
and behold in the dim background, beyond the first romance of conflict, the gloomy picture of a land impoverished, desolated, strewn with wrecks and drenched with blood, probably, nay surely, they had never dared the effort of an independent government. But Omniscience screened that scene from contemplation with so dense a veil that not even the most sagacious of their number could reasonably have guessed such a result. Hence, it was with the buoyancy of a holiday festival, with song and shout and laughter, with gay apparel, and steps that could scarcely refrain from dancing, that they marched to "the front";
and only feared lest they might be compelled to return without the glory of a victory, for to their then elated imaginations, battle and victory were synonymous.

But, alas, how unlike the long, drear reality, this fancy-sketch of youthful hope.

There was no death, no groan of pain, no
wail of bereavement, in their ideal war—nothing but the rattle of musketry and boom of artillery; the hurrahs of charging battalions, and the trophies won from the routed.

Soon Experience taught her terrible lesson and right nobly was it learned.

Battle followed battle. The hill-sides and the valleys were covered with the wounded and dead.

Hospitals were crowded until every home became a hospital. Hearstones were shadowed by an abiding melancholy.

The forms of the aged were bent under a heavier load than they could bear; a load which crushed many of them into the sepulcher. The tender heart-strings of matron and maid, repeatedly struck by the rude hand of Trouble, quivered forth a prolonged plaint of anguish, and broke with a death-moan. Angry clouds blackened the horizon, and reached their giant "arms" menacingly to the very zenith; and thick darkness was in all the land. Through that darkness stalked a mighty apparition,
a skeleton, upon whose long front was engraven, in letters that could be read by the baleful fires that glared from its own hollow eye-sockets—STARVATION! Still the battle raged on. The hot enthusiasm of the volunteer had now crystallized itself into the cool hardihood of the veteran. There was silence in the camp and on the march; it was the silence of superhuman resolve to conquer even despair—to do or die.

Victories had been gained against great odds; for two years the swarming hosts of invasion had been held upon the border; but now the thinning ranks began to waver and fall back before the invincible advance of the enemy. They retreated with their faces to the foe. They fought him with every backward step. They made him pay dearly for every inch of ground they surrendered. But day after day, as the muster roll was called, the little band saw itself becoming smaller and smaller,
until divisions were reduced to brigades,
and brigades to regiments, and regiments to companies. From the rear came noises of discontent and treachery, which were answered on the part of some by desertion. Letters were read in the light of of bivouac fires, by weary soldiers reclining amid sleet and snow, of wives and children driven from their last shelter,
their houses in ashes, their subsistence
destroyed, themselves breadless wanderers.
Ah! it is enough to have melted the firmest heart, but not enough to tempt the integrity of a faithful Confederate soldier.

With a prayer to God in their behalf, for succor and support, he resolved, by the consequences what they would, to remain at his post to the end.

Comrades, we remember it well. We remember how cheerily we went from our own Kentucky homes, our mothers and sisters, and sweethearts and wives, to assist our brothers of the South. We remember those four years of toil and ex-posure, and hunger and sickness and wounds. We remember the long marches from Bowling Green to Corinth, from Corinth to Baton Rouge, from Baton Rouge to Knoxville, from Knoxville to Murfreesboro, from Murfreesboro to Jonesboro, from Jonesboro to Nashville, from Nashville to Raleigh. We remember the winter campaigns when barefooted and bare-headed we kept step over rough roads to the music of our own purpose, never to succumb, and wrapped our jaded limbs in a wet blanket to shiver out the night by the wayside, and dream of comfortable mansions and genial firesides among the old blue-grass hills of our native State.

We remember how we prayed for peace,
but prayed without faith; how we sat down on the rocks and thought "it does not matter much whether in to-morrow's contest we live or die," and thought again,
"but oh, it would be so sweet to tread the familiar threshold and kiss the cherished lips once more," and wondered if the Heavenly Father might not spare us thro' it all. We remember the skirmish, the arranging of the lines, the bounding beat of the pulse, the fever flush of the cheek, the tight grip of the musket, the opening thunders of artillery, the wild screams of the booms that seemed the sea-gulls of the battle-storm, and the anxiety with which we waited for orders, and the thrill that shot through us and set our blood on fire as the command flew down the lines,
"Forward! Double-quick!" and the cheers which shook the air as we waved our flags from the forsaken breastworks; or the heart ache, worse than wounds, with which, after standing under a hail of bullets and having our ranks plowed by grape and canister, we were forced to retire and leave the enemy in possession of the field. Yes, we remember it all as if it had transpired yesterday, but nothing more vividly than the roll call after the battle and the report of the missing and the dead. How with suspended breath we listened for the name of a friend or messmate, whom we had lost in the confusion of the conflict, to hear if there were any tidings of his fate. And how, if that fate were announced in the most dreaded of words, "killed," we staggered off to mourn alone, and commune with memories of the unfortunate, of his rare qualities and generous deeds—memories that with a pale, funeral beauty came around us, and revealed to our inquiring eyes, by the flame of their torches, the track of the spirit's flight into eternity.

Fellow-soldiers: We have failed. We have nothing left us but the reflection of duty honestly discharged; a treasure, indeed, more valuable than mere success.
Many who participated in the work of our overthrow have exhibited that magnanimity which most gracefully adorns triumph.
They have forgiven the past and besought us to do likewise. They have appreciated our courage, and recognizing us as their equals, entreated us to regard them as our brothers. Shall I not say that this has been as the touch of the Saviour's finger to our eyelids, sealed in the blindness of despair; as the "Arise, take up thy bed and walk" of the Saviour's voice to our frames smitten with the palsy of a great calamity. Let us then be thankful, let us endeavor to view our condition from their standpoint as well as our own, and without any hypocritical confessions of error or shame, let us accept the vital issues as they are presented, and add another proof to those already given of our valor and wisdom by making the best of disaster. Upon our return to Kentucky we were as much joyed as surprised by receiving cordial welcomes from persons whom, in the heat of strife, we considered our adversaries. After an earthquake that rent families apart in enmity, we are again dwelling together, we are again working with sympathetic aims for common weal,
and talk over our adventures in either army without reviving the hatred buried with the end of the war in everlasting oblivion, and with mutual congratulations of escape from perils. God grant that the re-union of all the States may be as the re-union of Kentucky—natural, genuine, charitable.

These are some of the thoughts suggested by the occasion. But what shall I say of the dead whose last solemn rites we are now performing? What can I, a stranger, say, more than that they were Confederate soldiers, and died in sublime martyrdom to their faith and country? Were I to enumerate their individual virtues, to describe the inspired calmness with which they bared their bosoms to death, I

A Ramble in the Field of Literature.

How grand and wonderful a world opened to the student, and how illustrious the company with which he mingles. Even the student of English and American Literature alone has an enchanted region opened to his view, whose stores of precious wealth, is exhaustless. Led by philosophy, and attended by Bacon, Newton, Hamilton, and Edwards, we plunge beneath the blue fathoms of the sea, explore its mystic caverns, and walk amid its coral graves; or, flying through the regions of illimitable space, we watch the earth and planets rolling round the sun; or wearied thus, we return to man, scan his feelings, impulses and actions, then look within the charmed and awful circle of his mind, whose delicate machinery was set to work by the hand of the great Master Mechanic Himself. History stretches forth her sceptre, and Gibbon, Macaulay, Ramsey and Prescott appear, and then, clothed with immortal youth we look through the ages of the world from the instant when the first blast of the trumpet proclaimed the forward march of time. We hear the tread of Xerxes' millions, watch the assembling of Caesar's legions as they come like a cloud of eagles to a feast of blood. Babylon teems again with life and splendor. Rome rises and falls, the sages of Athens, walk again amid the shades of the academy, and onward our path extends, darkened at times by the gloom of the middle ages, lit up by the sunlight of the Reformation, hid again by the crimson tide of the French Revolution, and then revealed by the rising glories of the nineteenth century. Poetry calls that we may revel in the grand conception of Milton, and behold the fallen angels, Satan, unfurling his standard amid all the pomp and circumstance of infernal war. With Shakespear, we weep at the tragic end of the pure and lovely Desdemona, shudder at the guilty horror of Macbeth, and feel a coldness at the heart, as Shylock gloats over his prospective pound of flesh. We warm with the exquisite pathos and gentle melancholy of Goldsmith's Deserted Village, and we ask, with Gray,

"Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansion bring the fleeting breath?"

Longfellow intoxicates us with the pleasures of rural life in Evangeline. Poe's "Raven" croaks above the door. We float over "Seneca's Lake" with Percival, and from the depths of a swelling heart exclaim—

"How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollections present them to my view."

In Fiction, De Foe's Crusoe and his man Friday, still walk the earth. Uncle Toby would exist if every work of Sterne were lost forever. Scott asks the heart to be still as the tragedy of Lammamoor is being acted out, then dazzles us with feudal pageantry of Ivanhoe, then makes us pay the tribute of a tear at the shame and fall of Effie Deans. In Bulwer we are entranced with the eloquence of Rienzi, as he struggles with the fickle feeling, and warring patriotism of a once noble race, or stand with Arcturion while a sea of fiery lava pours over fated Pompeii. We watch with Irving, the American Addison, the awakening of Rip Van Winkle and gloat in terror at the ghostly visitors of Sleepy Hollow. We follow an Indian trail with Cooper, in the last of the Mohicans, and look curiously at Hawthorne's "Old apple dealer" who yet sits by the old South Church.

Being lifted to the forum of eloquence and oratory, we see the English Parliament straining to catch every sentence that falls from the tongue of Pitt, Fox, and Burke, whose vastness of mind and grandeur of genius gave them such resistless power, while a nation in the New World looks back to the proud period when Calhoun, Clay, Webster, Marshall and Prentiss swayed thousands by a style of oratory and splendid eloquence that belongs only to republics, and which placed them side by side with those immortals whose names and fame have descended to us unclouded through the wrecks and ruins of time.

What more shall we say of the beauties of English and American literature? Their treasures are priceless, their productions will stand comparison with those of the classic age of Greece. Look at the companions of the student, the mortal part of the illustrious of earth has long ago been scattered by the winds of heaven; the immortal is with us still: orators, poets, philosophers, historians are intellectual giants who have exerted their strength in a thousand ways, stand in shadowy groups around us.

"When triumphs, with imperial arts divine,
In withered laurels glide before our sight,
The melancholy ghosts of dead renown,
Whispering faint echoes of the world's applause."

Miscellaneous:

A Glimpse at our Progress.

It is a source of delight to the contemplative mind, to dwell upon the progress in our beloved country, in all the various aspects in which it may be viewed. Thirteen infant colonies scarcely exceeded at the commencement of the Revolution a population of three millions; while free institutions and a genial climate have advanced us in a period of eighty years to near forty millions, duplicating every twenty-five years, in marked contrast to the nations of the old world, none of which double their numbers in less than fifty years, and some of them in not less than one hundred years.

We have already dwelt upon many of the items in our progress in internal resources and turn now to the magnificent items of military and commercial, marine and mechanical power; subjects scarcely less inviting than the great interests of agriculture and internal navigation. We began our career in the carrying trade when we were but a tenth power among the nations of the earth, and it is not a half century since we were behind Holland, Sweden, Sardinia and other second-rate powers in commercial marine. For a quarter of a century we have passed them and France, in our progress, and are now in advance of Britain, which arrogantly assumes to be the Mistress of the Seas.—This rapid advance is the result of various causes, of which the carrying trade and the fisheries on the Northeast coast and the Pacific are the chief theatres of action. To the whale fishery we are more indebted for creating the first semen of the world, than any other cause. The economy and efficiency with which the whale ships are managed has taught us to navigate the world cheaper with our superior ships than do any other people, and hence we are at the head of all nations in our commercial marine.

How shall we have boldness enough to attempt to speak of our progress in our noble, heroic, self-sacrificing navy? It is a fit theme for the poet, the orator, the statesman, and the historian. There were a few heroic displays of the little navy in the war of the Revolution, which immortalized Paul Jones, Preble, Truxton, and Barney, but the foundation of our claim to high distinction as a naval power was laid in the war with Tripoli and Algiers, in 1801 to 1805. It was in this struggle with piratical nations, that Hull, and Bainbridge, and Decatur, and Stewart prepared themselves for the unequal contest in 1812, with Great Britain. So unequal that a Prime Minister of the nation which claimed that "not a sail but by her permission spreads," derided us with the remark, that we could not go to war, for we had barely a few feeble frigates, with a bit of striped bunting at the mast head. How we battled gloriously with this formidable naval power, the deeds of a three years' war abundantly testify. Ship after ship, and fleet after fleet succumbed to the superior seamanship and superior gunnery of officers and sailors, who, in addition to national honor, had the stirring motive of personal revenge to stimulate their heroism.—The ships of that day, commercial as well as military, became the models for other nations, particularly Sweden and Russia, the latter power causing the frigate "President" to be used as a model by the lecturing officers in her Naval Schools. We are now in a new phase—steam has wrought a wonderful revolution in naval warfare—and it is a proud reflection that we are in advance of other nations in this great emblem of power. We have as many steam-ships as any other nation, and more formidable in their character, affording a strong guarantee for peace in the midst of the imminent danger of war in Europe.

One word as to our progress in mechanical power. In other days we have imported much that was the result of foreign genius, but we are now the exporters of the most valuable inventions in the world. We send out machinery that diminishes labor and supply many nations with steamships, and mechanics who build them railroads. Our flag is on every sea, and Brother Jonathan, after enlightening other nations as to their true interests, comes home loaded with the spoils of his inventive genius. All honor to him!

SPOTSYLVANIA COURT-HOUSE, Va.,
Sept. 26, 1866.

A large number of the ladies of this county have organized themselves into a body called "The Spotsylvania Ladies' Memorial Association," the object of which will be to rescue from neglect and desecration the remains of those who offered up their lives in behalf of the "Lost Cause." It is intended, as far as possible, to identify and remove the remains of the Confederate dead who are buried in this and adjoining counties, to a cemetery, the site of which has been selected, and it is desired to make their last resting-place, worthy of the precious dust it shall contain, and of Virginia, who will guard with jealous care the dead sons of her bereaved sisters, still suffering from the desolations of a cruel war. We are compelled to appeal for aid for the furtherance of our object, to the patriotic and generous friends of the South, feeling that each one will esteem it a duty and a privilege to shield from obliteration the graves of those who went from their own State—it may be from their own homes. Remembering with pride what Southern women have accomplished in the dark, sad past, we have assurance that our appeal in behalf of our pious work will not be made in vain. Any lady by paying an annual subscription of twenty-five cents may become an active member of this Association. Any person may, by the payment of an annual subscription $1 or upwards, become an honorary, and any one paying $25 or upwards at any one time, may become a life member of this Association. Any society of kindred character may become auxiliary to this upon contributing not less than $100 to its funds, and shall be entitled to representation on the basis of two representatives to every $100 so contributed. MRS. DR. A. J. BOULWARE, President. MISS E. C. FRENCH, Mrs. J. R. SAMUEL, Cor. Secretary. Vice President. Mrs. R. C. DABNEY, Miss E. BROWNE, Treasurers. Recording Sec.

Miscellaneous:

The Southern Soldier.

Disguise the fact as they may, by the coarsest vituperation exhausting the vilest billingsgate, the Radical papers are slowly awakening to the fact, that the Southern soldiers, by their manly demeanor, are steadily and surely commanding the admiration and eliciting the warmest sympathy of all classes of their fellow-citizens.—Fighting for four years as men have seldom fought before—enduring hardships to which only some of Napoleon's campaigns could furnish a parallel—they threw aside the musket, abandoned the cannon, and let fall the sword at the bidding of their commanders; and with scarcely a murmur at their terrible defeat, hastened to the quiet avocations of peace. At their bidding or under their supervision, depopulated and razed cities are assuming their old career of prosperity; ships are sailing to distant shores; business, stagnant during the war, by the infusion of their energy grasps at its old dominion, and from their ashes, phoenix-like, we see rising the old supports of a dead commerce, a deserted altar, an abandoned or powerless judiciary. In the church, at the bar, on the quarter-deck, behind the counter, wielding the blacksmith's hammer, the carpenter's plane, or with brush in hand decorating works of useful architecture, slowly rising to hide the blackened remnants of a war in which they participated—we find everywhere the men who made Robert E. Lee's name terrible, and who threw a halo of glory around the dead Jackson.

Seemingly careless of politics, so far as politics mean the advancement of this party or the defeat of that—they yet watch narrowly the signs of the times, as those signs point to their political redemption or degradation. They are men—men who know what war, bloody desperate war, means—men still, however, in the language of the Moor; and thus feeling, they further know there are some things more to be feared than war—even though the result of that war should be to face Brownlow's threat of the Surveyor.

They make no threats, indulge in no pulling regrets; but on the other hand they have no fears, save for the destruction of the Constitution and laws under which they live. They know, however, that submission to that Constitution and obedience to those laws do not involve the annihilation of every vestige of their manhood, nor do they intend that this shall be the case whichever party is in the ascendant.

What then should be the treatment of these men who constitute the talent, and the bone and sinew of the South? That they can be true to convictions of right and duty, let their steady adherence to the lost cause, through blood, hunger and sickness attest. That they possess the purest elements of character—elements which always have a large admixture of the heroic, let their sanguinary battles, their heavy marches, their uncomplaining fortitude through every campaign, whether in the East or in the West, bear witness. There is—there can be—but one sound policy; if the people of the North mean peace—genuine peace instead of sowing discord and dissension between these men and the unfortunate race of the South has to take care of—treat the one kindly, and the other justly. Let the negro have all of your surplus humanity and benevolence; give to the Southern soldiers or citizen simply justice only—that justice decreed by the Constitution and laws of the country which is now his as much as it is yours.—Nashville Gazette.

For the Shelby Sentinel.
A Walk in the Country.

Mr. Editor:—I know of nothing so delightful and health-giving as a walk to the country, on some pleasant autumn morning—not a direct, hurried, business-like walk—but a slow, leisurely saunter, through field and forest, with an occasional rest on some rude seat, constructed by the hand of nature for your especial benefit, or to lounge on the soft, sweet, green lap of mother earth. Then to arise, wind your way slowly up some gradual swelling mound. When on the summit, the prospect will amply repay the toil of the ascent. Probably from this spot a most delightful and comprehensive view of Shelbyville and its surroundings may be obtained, and the gently winding and wooded banks of the lovely stream that encircle it may be seen for miles, and from this point may be seen many homes of our citizens, and the sweet spots selected and the elegant buildings erected thereon speaks not a little of the taste and liberality of the owners. Turn your eye gently to the right, and you perceive that delightful place, to the vision, "Grove Hill Cemetery," of which I endeavored a few weeks since to give your readers a description. As many persons are desirous of obtaining situations whereby they may educate their children, and, at the same time, be free from danger of cholera, the restrictions of quarantine, the heavy taxes of incorporated cities, &c. The writer hereof begs leave to say to all such, that Shelbyville and vicinity offers the most advantageous location in Kentucky. The country in and around Shelbyville is very beautiful, and extremely fertile, and affords some very fine scenery, the effect of which is enhanced by the highly cultivated fields, gardens and orchards which abound everywhere around. We humbly predict that any one taking our advice in this matter, will never regret it.

And we also venture to say, that any one who indulges in the recreation of such a walk as we have endeavored to portray, will feel themselves all the better for it, as much from the many pleasing objects which engage the attention and fascinate the eye, as from the pure air inhaled during the ramble. REKNAY LEBER.

Miscellaneous:

IRRITABILITY OF ILLNESS.—Those who are blessed with health can never know, till they are in their turn called upon to suffer, what heroic strength of spirit lies hidden under the mask of silent uncomplaining suffering, how strong the temptations are to be unreasonable, pettish, or repining; how difficult it is to be grateful, and still more to be amiable, when the irritation of every nerve renders the most skillful attendance irksome, and the dearest presence a burden; when the irritated frame loathes the sunshine of a smile, and dreads the tear and the cloud, where all is pain and weariness and bitterness! Let the healthy lay these things ever to heart, and while they scrupulously perform their duty—while they reverence the fortitude and patience of the gentle and resigned, let them have pity upon many a poor and querulous sufferer, upon their side let the sick not forget that the reverence and love thus excited are as the elixir of life to their often-wearied and over-taxed attendants, quickening them to exertion by the sweetest influences, instead of exhausting them with the struggle to perform an ungrateful duty.

We learn that the Court of Appeals will adjourn on Wednesday next. That closes the summer term. The court will not meet again till the first Monday in December.

General Kirby Smith was in Shelbyville yesterday.

There was an eclipse of the sun last Monday, but "we couldn't see it," as it was only a partial eclipse.

TOBACCO CHEWERS, if you want something nice, call on H. & H., and get some of their new brand: Lester's Fig. It can't be beat.

At the New Albany Fair, last week, the premium and certificate for best mare, for general utility, was taken by Geo. C. Howell of Shelby.

We wish to secure the services of a young man of energy and reliability, for which ample remuneration will be given. Early application must be made at this office.

Rev. S. D. Baldwin, D. D., of Nashville, died in that city of cholera last Monday. Dr. Baldwin was an eminent minister of the Methodist Church, and author of the well-known work, "Armageddon."

H. & H.—It is a well known fact, that the best cigars and tobacco in town, are at Hastings & Hollenbach's. They keep a more select stock of Virginia Tobacco and Havana Cigars than can be found anywhere. Their Macaboy, Rappee and Scotch Snuff is second to none in the market.

The hearts of thousands of children in Kentucky will be saddened at the death of Rev. W. S. Sedgwick, the well-known Sunday School Agent. He died at Bardstown, September 29th, of congestive chills. The good that he has done will live after him, and his memory will be held in sacred remembrance by the little ones, who have been delighted by his efforts to please and instruct them.

Paul R. Shipman has been added to the editorial staff of the Louisville Journal. It will be remembered that during Mr. Shipman's connection with the Journal in 1864, he was arrested by General Burbridge and sent South. Since that time he has not been engaged in politics. He will add vastly to the influence of the Journal. He writes with gracefulness and power.

SHELBY CIRCUIT COURT is still progressing. This is the third week. The Commonwealth cases are at last exhausted. In the case of Geo. Hall, charged with the murder of Morton Merick, was convicted of manslaughter, and given six years to serve the State. A motion was made for a new trial.

Dunnevant, charged with the murder of Faber, was acquitted. The Court is now occupied with common law cases.

A SUGGESTION.—Louisville, Lexington, and perhaps other cities and towns in this State, are striving to establish public libraries. We trust they will succeed; but whether they do or not, we would impress upon our citizens the necessity of having a large, well-selected library, one that will be an honor to our town, and that will be an example of our liberality.

The Young Men's Christian Association are accumulating a good selection of standard works. They should be aided, or through some means, we should have a library to which all of our citizens should have access.

We merely suggest this subject now, and at some other time will attempt to show some of the reasons why we should have a public library.

Our neighbor of the Frankfort Yeoman dilates at length upon the various attractions of his town. From the wonderful description given, one is reminded of Ancient Babylon, with its swinging gardens and unrivaled splendors.

Frankfort is "a paradise for boys," who bathe in its "bright waters" in summer, and who, when winter comes, glide over its "ice bound" streams. The "citizens have extensive green-houses, where, in the midst of winter, you will see the choicest of tropical flowers, blooming in the wildest magnificence." Enjoying such wonderful delights, the town is free from all the disadvantages which afflict other less favored localities. "We have no malaria, no epidemics, no cholera, and the people who take proper care of themselves, may generally expect to reach the age of three score and ten." Wonderful fact! But space fails us to enumerate the blessings which have been lavished so profusely upon our State Capital. We, in conclusion, commend Frankfort and all its institutions (except the Penitentiary) to the public. It's a lively place, and will well repay a visit.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INT'L. REV., Washington, Sept. 27, 1866.

JOHN R. BECKLEY, SIR:—I reply to your letter of Sept. 21st, that "distilled spirits which have already been inspected, gauged, and tax paid, but which are still in the hands of the distiller," must be re-inspected, re-gauged, and marked, as provided by section 43, if manufactured prior to September 1st, and "intended for sale."

Very respectfully,
THOMAS HARLAND,
Deputy Commissioner.

JOHN R. BECKLEY,
Collector 4th District Kentucky.

Mrs. Fisher, of Yarmouthport, Mass., who was disturbed last week by a man concealed under her bed, who fled on discovery has since received a letter containing $15, stating that the writer was the individual under the bed, but that he was there for no criminal purpose, and that the money inclosed was to pay her for the trouble she had been put to.

Late correspondents say the evidence of Napoleon's suffering and declining strength can not be longer concealed from the public by the most adroit attempts to represent him as still healthy and comparatively vigorous. Indeed, it is now confidently stated in various quarters that he is the victim of a malady which, though it may be protracted, is recognized by medical science as incurable.

A young lady riding in the car on the Susquehanna Railroad was suddenly assaulted very violently the other day by an old lady in the seat behind her, who tore the "waterfall" from the young lady's head, threw it on the floor, and commenced stamping upon it. The young lady was at first disposed to resent this treatment, but it was soon explained to her that her waterfall was on fire when the old lady seized it. She was sitting by the open window, and a spark from the locomotive had lighted in her back hair, and would soon have lighted it up had not assistance been thus promptly rendered.

A Proclamation.

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, has been pleased to vouchsafe to us as a people another year of that national life which is an indispensable condition of peace, security and progress. That year moreover, has been crowned with many peculiar blessings. The civil war that has been so recently among us has not anywhere been reopened. Foreign intervention has ceased to excite alarm or apprehension. Invasive pestilence has been benignly mitigated; domestic tranquility has improved; the sentiments of conciliation have largely prevailed, and the affection of loyalty and patriotism have been widely renewed. Our fields have yielded quite abundantly; our mining industry has been richly rewarded, and we have been allowed to extend our railroad system far into the interior recesses of the country, while our commerce has resumed its customary activity in foreign seas. These national blessings demand a national acknowledgment. Now, therefore, I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do hereby recommend that Thursday, the 29th day of November next, be set apart and be observed everywhere in the several States and Territories of the United States by the people thereof, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer to Almighty God, with due remembrance, that in His temple doth every man speak of His Honor. I recommend also, that on the same solemn occasion we do humbly and devoutly implore Him to grant to our National Councils and to our whole people, that divine wisdom which alone can lead any nation into the ways of all good offerings. In these national thanksgivings, praises and supplications, we have the divine assurance that the Lord remaineth a king forever; that they that are weak shall be guided in judgment, and such as are gentle shall learn His way: the Lord shall give strength to His people, and the Lord shall give to His people the blessings of peace.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington the eighth day of October; in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-first.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
WM. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

The following letter, from General Grant to Brevet Brigadier-General Hillyer, is published:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE U. S.,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 19, 1866.

I see from the papers that you have been making a speech in which you pledge me to a political party. I am further in receipt of a letter from General Gresham, of Indiana, in which he says that his opponent from Congress has published an extract from a letter received from you, in which you pledged me to the support of President Johnson and as opposed to the election of any candidate who does not support him and his policy. You nor no man living is authorized to speak for me in political matters, and I ask you to desist in the future. I want every man to vote according to his own judgment without influence from me.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

A NEW FEATURE.—The State Fair was opened on Tuesday morning with a solemn appeal to the Throne of Grace, by Elder David Walk, pastor of the Christian Church, in this city. The President of the Association, Col. L. J. Bradford, in preferring the request to Mr. Walk said, that he thought it eminently proper to offer thanks to the Giver of all good for bountiful harvests and fruitful seasons; and that such exhibitions should, as much as possible, be divested of all immoral features and tendencies. The vast audience arose to their feet, and not a voice was heard during the delivery of the prayer. It is proper to say that Mr. Walk was not present at the Fair Grounds when it was determined to have prayer offered, but was sent for by the President.—Paris Kentuckian.

The Sunday School state convention begins Oct. 17th and continues three days.

Capital Story.

MOST THRILLING ADVENTURE

A TALE OF OLD VIRGINIA.

It was about the year 1805, that I settled in Virginia, near the falls of the Kanawha. The country, at that time, was an unbroken wilderness. But few settlements had been made by the whites, and they were so far apart as to render vain all hopes of assistance in case of attack from hostile Indians, numbers of whom still infested the neighborhood.

I lived there alone with my wife for several months unmolested, and by dint of perseverance, then young and hardy, had succeeded in making quite a clearing in the forest, which I planted with corn, and which promised an abundant yield.

One morning after we had dispatched our humble meal, and just prepared to venture forth upon my accustomed routine of labor, my attention was arrested by the tinkling of a cow bell in the corn field.

"There," said my wife, "the cow is in the cornfield."

But the ear of the backwoodsman becomes by education very acute, especially so, from the fact that his safety often depends upon the nice cultivation of that sense. I was not so easily deceived. I listened. The sound was repeated. "That," said I, in reply to my wife's remark, "was not the tinkle of a bell upon the neck of a cow, but a decoy from some Indian, who wishes to draw me into ambush."

Believing this to be the case, I took down my old musket, and seeing that it was properly loaded, I stole cautiously around the field towards the spot from which the sound seemed to proceed.

As I suspected, there in a clump of bushes, crouched an Indian, waiting for me to appear in answer to his decoy bell, that he might send a fatal bullet to my heart. I approached without discovering myself to him, until within shooting distance, then raised my piece and fired. The bullet sped true to its mark, and the Indian fell dead.

Not trusting but that he might be accompanied by others, I returned with all speed to the cabin, and having firmly barricaded the door, I watched all day for the companions of the Indian I had killed. — To add to the danger and seeming helplessness of my situation, I discovered that I had but one shot left, and, if attacked by numbers, I should be entirely in their power. Determined to do the best with the charge of powder, I put it into the musket, and then waited for the approach of night, feeling sure of an attack.

Night came at last. A beautiful moonlight it was too, and favored me greatly, as I would thereby be able to observe the movements of the enemy as they approached the cabin.

It was some two hours after nightfall, and yet I had neither heard nor seen a sign of the Indians, when suddenly I was startled by the baying of my dog at the stable. The stable stood a little to the west of the cabin, and between the two was a patch of clear ground, upon which the light of the moon fell unobstructed. Judging from the noise at the stable that they would advance from that direction, I posted myself at the port hole on that side of the cabin.

I had previously placed my wife on the cross-pole in the chimney, so that in case our enemies effected an entrance into our cabin, she might climb out through the lower chimney and effect her escape. For myself I entertained no hope; but determined not to be taken alive and to sell my life dearly.

With breathless anxiety I waited at the port hole. At length I saw them emerge from the shadow of the stable, and advance across the open ground towards my cabin. One—two—three—great heaven! six stalwart Indians armed to the teeth, and urged on by the hope of revenge, and I alone to oppose them, with one charge of powder. My case was desperate, indeed. With quick and stealthy steps, in close, single file, they approached, and were already within a few yards of the house, when a slight change in the movement of the forward Indian changed the position of the six, so that a portion of the left side of each was uncovered.

They were in range, one aim would cover all. Quick as thought I aimed and fired. As the smoke cleared away I could hardly credit what my senses showed me as the result of my shot. The fifteen slugs with which I had loaded the musket, had done their work well, five of the six Indians lay dead upon the ground, and the sixth had disappeared.

Although no enemies were now in sight, I did not venture forth until morning. — There lay the bodies of the five Indians undisturbed, together with the rifle of the other. Securing the arms and ammunition of the fallen Indians I followed up the trail of the missing one until I reached the river, beyond which point I could discover nothing. From the amount of blood which marked his trail, together with unmistakable evidence that he had picked his way with difficulty, I was led to believe that he was mortally wounded, and in order to prevent his body from falling into the hands of the white foe, he had groped his way to the river, and thrown himself in the current which had borne it away.

The Indians had killed my cow, and that you may be assured, was no trifling loss, yet in my gratitude for my escape from the merciless savages, I would have made greater sacrifices. I was well provided by means of arms and ammunition taken from the six Indians, in case of a second attack, but this, fortunately, proved to be my last adventure with the savages.

Not one of the band had escaped to tell the tale, and incite his brethren to revenge the death of his comrades.

"Ah!" exclaimed the old man, while the tears gushed from his eyes, at the memory of that eventful night, "that was a glorious shot—the best I ever made!"

A calculation in one of the Macon journals estimates that it will require fifteen million bushels of corn to supply the deficiency in Georgia the next season.

Over one hundred persons have professed conversion at a meeting held by Baptists and Methodists in Charles City county, Va.

A Good Hit.

In the late speech of Governor Parsons, of Alabama, in New York, a man who was stanchly for the Union during the war, we find the following good hit:

"You hear it said that we at the South care not loyal. What does loyalty mean? It means obedience to the laws in one sense and attachment to the government of the country in another sense; but I defy any one to point to a single act done by the great body of the people at the South sanctioning disloyalty or disobedience to the Constitution of the United States. [Cheers.] On the 9th of April, 1865, General Lee surrendered. General Johnson and Kirby Smith followed in rapid succession. Their surrender was indorsed by every man from the Potomac to the Rio Grande in less than sixty days [cheers], and I defy any man to show any hostility to the laws or Constitution of the United States in the South from that day to this. That there have been disorders and outbreaks I do not deny; but they were political; they were such disturbances as happen any-where. We hear it said that there is no liberty of speech down there. Well, I will guarantee if the President visits us he can have a hearing, and that is more than he gets in the North-west. [Great laughter and applause.] What would be said if, because the President could not be heard in Indiana, Congress should propose to keep that State out of the Union? [Laughter.] It makes a vast difference whose ox is gored. [Laughter.] The fact of the matter is, some people don't like us because we don't sing out of the right psalm-book. [Laughter.] You may have heard of the old Methodist lady who objected to the Baptists and Presbyterians when they began to hold camp-meetings. 'Why, don't you believe in camp-meetings?' they said. 'Don't you believe in bringing sinners into the fold in that way?' 'Why, yes,' said the good old lady; 'I wouldn't object if they would sing out of the Methodist hymn book.' [Great laughter.] That is the case with the Radicals; they are afraid the representatives from the South won't sing out of Republican hymn-books. [Laughter.] That's what's the matter." [Renewed laughter.]

For the benefit of those who desire to make an effort to obtain compensation for their slaves enlisted in the Federal army, we publish the law upon this subject. It will be found in the 13th volume of U. S. Statutes at large, chapter 12, section 24, page:

"And be it further enacted, That all able bodied male colored persons between the ages of 20 and 45 years, resident in the United States, shall be enrolled, according to the provisions of this act and of the act to which this is an amendment, and form part of the national forces; and when a slave of a loyal master shall be drafted and mustered into the service of the United States, his master shall have a certificate thereof, and thereupon such a slave shall be free; and the bounty of $100, now payable by law for each drafted man, shall be paid to the perbo whom said drafted was owing service, or at the time of his muster into the service of the United States. The Secretary of War shall appoint a commissioner in each of the slave States represented in Congress, charged to award to each loyal person to whom a colored volunteer may owe service, a just compensation, not exceeding $300 for each such colored volunteer may owe service, a just compensation, not exceeding $300 for each such colored volunteer, payable out of the fund derived from communications, and every such colored volunteer on being mustered into the service shall be free. And in all cases when men of color have been heretofore enlisted or have volunteered in the military service of the United States, all the provisions of this act, so far as the payment of bounty and compensation are provided, shall be equally applicable as to those who may be hereafter recruited. But men of color, drafted or enlisted, or who may volunteer into the military service, while they shall be credited on the quotas of the several States, or sub-divisions of States, wherein they are respectively drafted, enlisted, or shall volunteer, shall not be assigned as State troops, but shall be mustered into regiment or companies as United States colored troops.

The Wife.

Only let a woman be sure that she is precious to her husband—not useful, not valuable, not convenient, simply, but lovely and beloved; let her be the recipient of his polite, hearty attentions; let her feel that her care and love are noticed, appreciated and returned; let her opinion be asked, her approval sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which he is cognizant; in short, let her only be loved, honored and cherished, in fulfillment of the marriage vow, and she will be to her husband, her children and society, a well-spring of pleasure. She will bear pain, and toil, and anxiety, for her husband's love is, to her, a tower and fortress. Shielded and sheltered therein, adversity will have lost its sting. She may suffer, but sympathy will dull the edge of sorrow.

A house with love in it—and by love I mean love expressed in words, and looks, and deeds, for I have not one spark of faith in love that never crops out—is to a house without love as a person to a machine; one is love the other is mechanism. The unloved woman may have bread just as light, a house just as tidy as the other, but the latter has a spring of beauty about her, a joyousness, an aggressive and penetrating and pervading brightness to which the former is a stranger. The deep happiness in her heart shines out in her face. She is a ray of sunlight in the house. She gleams over it. It is airy and gay and graceful and warm, and welcoming with her presence; she is full of devices and plots, and sweet surprises for her husband and family; she has never done with the romance of life; she, herself, is a lyric poem, setting herself to all pure and gracious melodies. Humble household ways and duties have for her a golden significance. The prize made the calling high, and the end sanctifies the means. "Love is heaven, and heaven is love."

"THE LOST CAUSE."

BY E. A. POLLARD.

Is the only Standard and Official Southern History Published.

A CARD FROM THE AUTHOR.

CAUTION.—Agents and the public are warned against an attempt of C. B. Richardson, Publisher, to trust upon the public certain Annals of the War, gathered from the four corners of the newspapers and arranged by me as pioneers of an original and elaborate work.

He boldly appropriates to these stale productions the title of "Standard Southern History," which he says completes the Author's History of "The Lost Cause." Such an outrage upon the fruits of my labor and the confidence of the public I leave to the judgement and resentment of the reading public.

EDWARD A. POLLARD.

The Publishers also pleasure in saying that THE LOST CAUSE, by E. A. Pollard, is the only STANDARD AND OFFICIAL SOUTHERN HISTORY published. GEO. B. FESSENDEN &amp; Co., General Agents, Louisville, Ky.
